

Beach beaut: Tushka Glimtmeier and Nathan Rooney win an under-250sqm new home award plus colour awards, for a Waikanae beach house.

Architects hit winning formula by design

FOUR Wellington properties have won regional architecture awards and will be put up for national honours.

The winners of Architectural Designers New Zealand-Resene Design Awards were announced at a dinner at the Southward Car Museum near Paraparauamu on Friday.

Designers from the lower half of the North Island attended.

Tushka Glimtmeier and Nathan Rooney from Wellington's Space Architecture Studio won the Residential New Home under 250 square metres section for a Waikanae beach house.

The property also won an award for its interior and exterior colour scheme.

Graeme Calcott, of Wellington firm Calcott Architecture and Landscape Design, won the Residential New Home over 250sqm section, for a family home he designed for a lifestyle block in Tawa.

Jon Ambler from Paraparauamu design company A D Architecture won the Residential Alterations and Additions Design Award for the renovation of a small Waikanae bach. His colleague, Peter Davis, was successful in the Commercial-Industrial Design Award category with his Monteith's Kapiti Junction brewery bar project in Paraparauamu.

Gisborne architect Chris Shaw, of Pacific Modern Architecture, won awards for the design of a home overlooking Raglan Harbour and the Wainui School Library building.

The winners' entries will go on to compete at the national awards in Nelson in October. The judging panel included Wellington architect Ian Athfield. The award dinner was one of six regional events to be held this month.

Coast and country:

ADNZ general manager Astrid Andersen said the "breadth and depth" of this year's entries was impressive. "It's recognition from your peers really. To have your work recognised by a judging team of that calibre is really impressive."
